Note 1: Following the death of Jan Hus in 1415 the Catholic League-Hussite War broke out in Bohemia and Monravia (Monrovia), with peace coming in 1436. This was in essence a counter-reformation, but did not result in specific lands being awarded, but instead the four articles of the compact were agreed. One of those four articles was communion with both kinds (bread and wine) and one was preaching in the native language, which apparently was allowed only in this area, as they both came up as issues about 100 years later in the Lutheran Reformation. Interestingly Saxony was adjacent to Bohemia and Monravia.

Note2: Following the Peace of Augsburg and the Catholic counter-Reformation the predominately Lutheran areas in the German states have remained much the same to this present time.
